III. History Survey

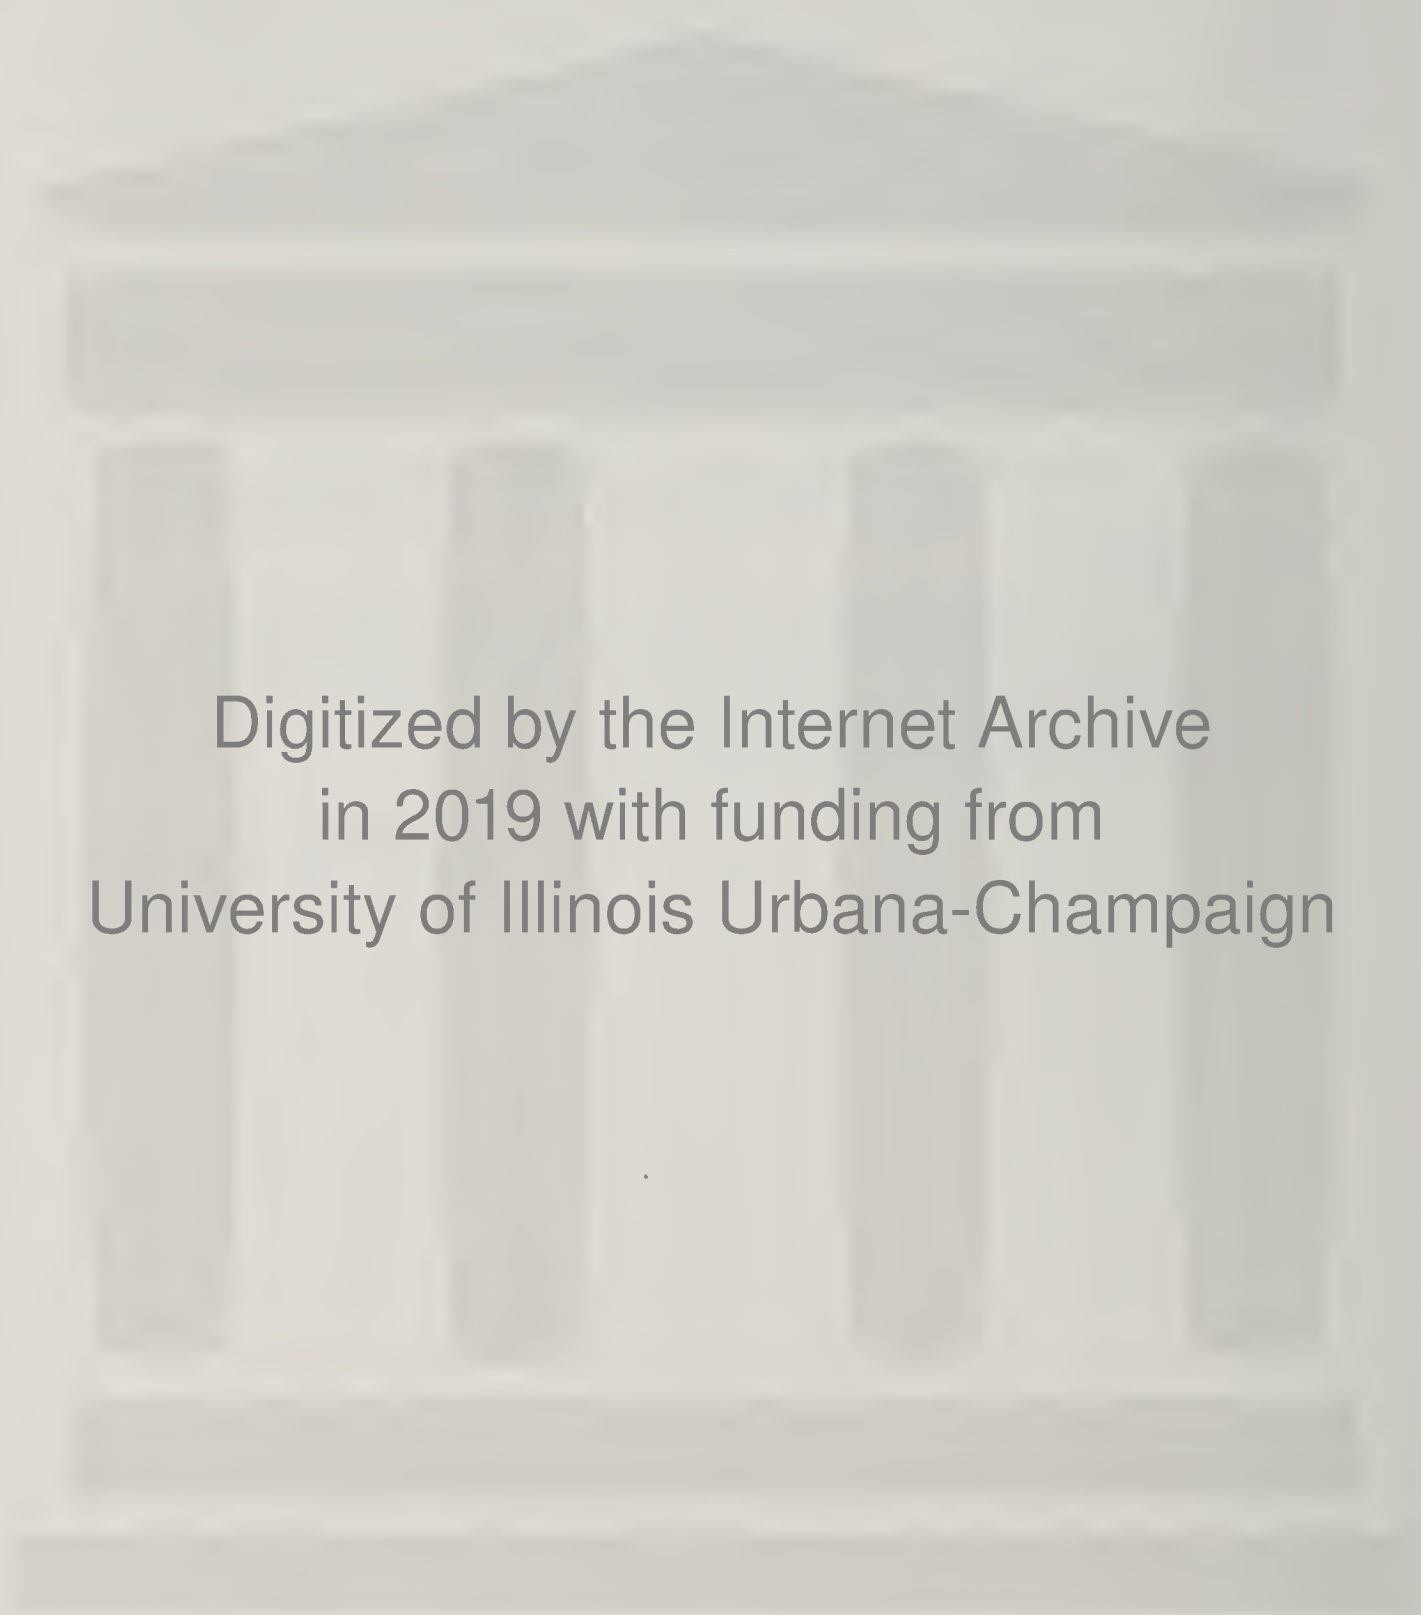

P R E F A C E

This special list is one of several prepared by the National Archives and Records Administration to provide information about the extensive microfilm holdings in its Regional Archives System. In addition to original federal records of regional interest, each of the 11 regional archives holds microfilm of records that would otherwise be available for research only in National Archives facilities in the Washington, DC, area. Lists describing this regionally held microfilm include the comprehensive National Archives Microfilm in the Regional Archives System and separate lists of the microfilm publications available in each regional archives.

These lists of microfilm publications serve as companions to 11 guides that describe the original records available in each regional archival facility. The original records, created by field units of federal agencies and by U.S. district and appeals courts, document the operation of the federal government at regional, state, and local levels. Through the use of the microfilm available in each regional archives, researchers are able to link these field records to related documents created by headquarters officials.

Special lists and guides have been developed by staff members at each regional archives to increase public awareness of the rich research potential of the federal records in their custody. I join with them in encouraging researchers to explore this inviting documentary frontier.

INTRODUCTION

This is a guide to the National Archives microfilm publications that have been deposited in the National Archives–Great Lakes Region. These publications, on 16mm and 35mm microfilm and on microfiche, reproduce with introductions and annotations some of the most significant records in the National Archives. Among them are the records of the Continental Congress, 1774–89; most of the 19th-century correspondence of the Department of State; population census schedules; certain compiled military service records; records of the Supreme Court; German records captured during and after World War II; records documenting federal administration of Indian affairs; and a variety of other records.

The program for distributing National Archives microfilm publications to the National Archives regional archives was begun in 1970 as a means of increasing the availability of primary research sources to scholars, family historians, and the general public. All of the microfilm publications listed in this guide can be used in this regional archives. Because the program of regional microfilm distribution is a continuing one, this guide will be updated periodically to reflect additions to the holdings of this regional archives.

This guide consists of six parts. Part I is a list of the record groups represented in this guide. Part II is a descriptive list of all microfilm publications found in this regional archives. It is arranged in numerical order by record group number. The term “RECORD GROUP” (RG) refers to a system of administrative control used by the National Archives for the records in its custody and has no relation to the microfilm numbers listed. Part III is a listing, in numerical order by microfilm publication number, of all of the microfilm publications held by this regional archives. Parts IV and V, respectively, list publications numerically by record group number and alphabetically by record group title. Part VI is a subject index to this guide.

Microfilm publications are divided into two series, identified by “M” and “T” numbers. Usually, an “M” publication reproduces an entire series of records and has an introduction describing the origin, content, and arrangement of the records filmed. Descriptive pamphlets are available for most “M” publications. The pamphlet contains the publication’s introduction and a roll-by-roll breakdown of the records filmed. Microfiche or paper (sometimes microfiche and paper) copies of the pamphlets may be examined at the regional archives. A “T” publication is not always a reproduction of complete series of records but may be a segment, selected by date or subject, of a larger series. In many cases “T” publications were filmed as the result of a special reference request. These publications usually contain no introductions, and pamphlets are not usually available for them. However, in the case of census microfilm publications, which are “T” publications, separate descriptive information is available.

Appearing directly after the title of each publication listed in this guide is the number of rolls available in this regional archives. A phrase such as "7 rolls," "120 rolls," or "1 roll," means that the publication consists of 7 rolls, 120 rolls, or 1 roll, and that all of the rolls are available in this regional archives. However, a phrase such as "roll 1 only" or "roll 16 only" means that this regional archives holds only roll 1 or roll 16 of a multiroll publication. For many multiroll publications, this regional archives may only have those rolls that cover areas or subjects of local interest; or only particular rolls that have been donated to the regional archives.

This guide is intended for use by researchers interested only in the microfilm publication holdings of this regional archives. Researchers interested in the holdings of the other 10 regional archives should consult either the individual guides to the holdings of the other 10 regional archives or National Archives Microfilm Publications in the Regional Archives System (Special List 45), which is the comprehensive guide to microfilm publications held systemwide. Copies of these guides are available in this regional archives.

Revolutionary War Pension and Bounty-Land Warrant Application Files. 2,670 rolls.

An estimated 80,000 pension and bounty-land warrant application files based on the participation of American army, naval, and marine officers and enlisted men in the Revolutionary War. Most of the records in the files are dated between 1800 and 1900. The term "files," as used in this microfilm publication, denotes envelopes containing applications or other records pertaining to claims for pensions or bounty-land warrants; cards summarizing information about claimants for whom no original application papers exist; and cards that serve as cross-references to envelopes and summary cards. Therefore, a file can be a single card or it can be an envelope containing from 1 to 200 or more pages of records. The typical file is an envelope containing about 30 pages of records, consisting generally of the application or applications of one or more claimants, other documents submitted as evidence of identity and service, and papers showing actions taken by the government concerning the claim or claims. Each file pertains to applications by one or more persons for pensions or bounty-land warrants based on service of a single person, usually in the Revolutionary War, although some files relate to claims based on post-Revolutionary War service.

Records of Superintendencies of Indian Affairs

During the 19th century there were two principal types of field jurisdictions within the Bureau of Indian Affairs: superintendencies and agencies. A superintendent had general responsibility for Indian affairs in a geographic area, usually a territory; agents were immediately responsible for the affairs of one or more tribes. Until the 1870s most agents were responsible to a superintendent. The records of a superintendency relate to almost all aspects of Indian administration in the jurisdiction, including treaties, Indian subsistence, claims arising from Indian removal, land reserves, intrusions on Indian lands, law and order, hostilities and depredation claims, annuity payments to Indians, locations of agencies, schools, purchase of supplies, employees, and accounts. Most of the superintendent's correspondence was conducted with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and with agents in the superintendency, but there was also correspondence with army officials, Indians, businessmen, and others.
